He justly disabuses his readers of the too prevalent idea that the simple operation of division of a tendon can alone restore a distorted limb. It is an erroneous conception of the nature of tenotomy to suppose it an operation which without further difficulty is capable of removing every distortion and contraction, in the manner that an incarcerated hernia is relieved by division of the structured parts; more especially to imagine that an advanced degree of club-foot can be cured by division of the tendo achillis alone. The section of the contracted tendons does not remove the distortion of the limb, but prepares it for a well-adjusted mechanical treatment. In many...
