Divine faith must be grounded on the word of God: but no man s name is inserted in Scripture, as names are in grants and wills; to which the engagements and promises of the new covenant are sometimes compared. In order therefore to be assured, that I am the person to whom the promised blessings belong, I must enquire, whether my case and character accord with those described in the promises. Now these are not made to sinners as such, but to saints; to those that fear the Lord, and tremble at his word: to the contrite, the broken-hearted, the mourners; to those who trust in the Lord, call upon him, follow after righteousness, know the Lord, love God, do his will, and hearken to the voice of his servants; to the meek, the merciful, the pure in heart, those that hunger and thirst after righteousness, and such as are persecuted for righteousness sake. In short the promises are made to those who truly believe; for faith is the radical principle of all holy dispositions-As far therefore, as we are conscious, that our experience, desires, pursuits, habitual aim, and character correspond to these dispositions and, affections; we may be sure that the covenanted blessings belong to us: yet in exactness of language this is not faith, but hope; the full assurance of hope. This should be sought after and preserved by holy diligence: and, as the humble believer, however diligent, will...
