Part III of the epic fantasy Windflower Saga trilogy set in a late medieval world entering its industrial age. A victim of conspiracy that reaches to the highest levels, Tribune Loris Kennet of Pomerania is unjustly stripped of rank and position in the elite Royal Winged Cavalry. He is publicly flogged, disgraced, shunned by comrades and friends, doubted even by his own beloved father, and facing a banishment so harsh it will surely kill him. With the hope it will keep his son alive to clear his name one day, his father urges him to accept an alternative. Enroute to the remote southern Wastelands of distant Kimbria, married by proxy and in name only to a widow he has never met, Loris wonders if the screams in the nightmares that disturb his sleep will ever be silenced. The widow is Lady Keridwen Ulani of Ansgar, the only mixed-race noble family. She welcomes Loris into her home and guides him to find the help he needs to heal. They become friends and, in the process, Loris falls in love with Keridwen and wants their pretend marriage to become a real one. However, she will not agree until he clears the dishonor over his name. That requires that Loris chase after pirates and the remnants of their victims, to bring them to justice. The romance between Loris and Keridwen is sweet and tender.
